Summary

I am a PhD candidate (expected July 2027) at the Annenberg School for Communication, University of Pennsylvania, studying how social identity is visually conveyed and leveraged in political communication. I combine computer vision, natural language processing, and machine learning to analyze large-scale text, image, and video data — from out-of-home political advertisements in Mexican elections to political expression on TikTok — and to study bias in AI systems such as vision-language models.
